THE TRUTH IS PERVERTED

Facts About the Differential Sugar Duty.

THE DEMOCRATIC PURPOSE

Republicans Solely Responsible for Any Injury It May Inflict on Trade.

McKinley Tariff Protected the Trust at Public Expense.

Facts in the Case.

In the regular Washington correspondence of the New York Tribune appeared the following precious paragraph in regard to the discriminatory duty of one-tenth of a cent a pound on sugar, imported from bounty paying countries: "The house of representatives responded to the president's appeal to rescind the duty and adopted his recommendation. The Democratic senate ignored both the appeal and the recommendation, and the obnoxious provision remains in force."

Now, what are the facts in regard to this obnoxious provision? In the second session of the recent congress the conference committee of the two houses had agreed to its repeal, but in the peculiar position into which the tariff bill had fallen neither this nor any other amendment could be made without endangering the entire measure in the senate. In accordance with this action of the conference committee, the house, by a unanimous Democratic vote, passed the bill to repeal the discriminatory duty on sugar. But while a sprinkling of western Republicans voted for the repeal in response to the demands and interests of their constituents ex-Speaker Reed and other leading Republicans voted in the negative. Among the nays were Representative Dalzell and a number of other Pennsylvania Republicans, but not one Republican vote from Pennsylvania was recorded in the affirmative. Whether these Republicans so voted merely to embarrass Cleveland's administration or whether they regarded this differential duty as proper in itself does not clearly appear from their utterances, but the public has a well grounded opinion on the subject.

As to the senate, its Republican members declared in a formal caucus that they would consent to no amendment of the tariff in any respect. In view of this threat, which the Republican senators were able to make good, it would have been a mere waste of public time to attempt to repeal the discriminatory duty on sugar. The disposition of the Democrats of the senate on that subject was reflected in the action of the conference committee in the previous session. They failed to repeal the differential duty on sugar only because of the obstruction of the Republican senators.

In keeping with the above quoted perversion of the truth is the assertion in the same correspondence that the new tariff, by this differential duty on sugar, has "ceased" a sudden reversal of the favorable conditions of trade with Germany. It is charged by all the organs and orators of protection that the new tariff law greatly favors the trade of Germany and the rest of Europe at the expense of the American people. In such a case why should there be so great a clamor on either side of the ocean over this trivial differential duty of one-tenth of a cent a pound on sugar?

But how great and sudden has been this "reversal" of conditions? The McKinley tariff imposed this differential duty on the refined sugar of bounty paying countries, and the new tariff law simply extends it to all imports of sugar from those countries. By the McKinley tariff the refined sugar of Germany was excluded duty free, both operations having been designed to serve the interests of the sugar trust at the expense of the public treasury as well as of the consumers of the United States. But as long as the German agrarians had a free market for their raw beet sugar in this country they made no complaint over the exclusion of the refined sugars of the German manufacturers.

Whatever else may be said of the differential duty on sugar, its repeal in the last session of congress would have removed a pretext of the protectionists of Germany and France to make war upon the export trade of the United States. It is quite true that the embargo upon American beef and cattle in Germany was not the act of the imperial government, which has not taken one step against the trade of this country since the new tariff was enacted, notwithstanding the agrarian clamors for retaliation. The prohibitions upon these exports have been made in German courts on alleged sanitary grounds. But if the differential duty on sugar really be at the bottom of these measures, as the protectionists of this country loudly assert in spite of German official denials, the Republicans in the senate are solely responsible for all the injury that the duty has inflicted or may hereafter inflict upon American trade. Had they not obstinately barred the way the duty would not now be in existence. The purpose of the Democrats in the last congress is sufficiently attested both by the act of the conference committee and by the vote of the house in favor of repeal. —Philadelphia Record.

Not Ruined by Free Trade.

The Haverhill (Mass.) shoe manufacturers have been caught in the middle of "the busiest trade ever known at this season of the year" by a rise in the price of sole leather. Evidently the hide industry has not been ruined by its freedom from import, and it is scarcely possible that the passing pinch will reduce the manufacturers to the necessity of walking on their uppers.—Selected.

A SOLDIER OF FORTUNE.

He Claims to Have Fought the World Over, but is Now in Prison.

No less distinguished a personage than Francis Leo G. Harden, late a lieutenant in her British majesty's colonial naval reserve, occupies a cell in San Francisco.

He is a daredevil and a naught fearing young man, if his apparent efforts to become any kind of a revolutionist can be taken for anything.

He has had all sorts of fights, but was fairly hankering to head a movement to restore Liliuokalani to the Hawaiian throne. He failed to get the necessary backing, whereupon he subsided until the war broke out between China and Japan.

He offered his sword to the emperor of China, and the news was immediately telegraphed the Chinese minister at Washington. China, it was rumored at the time, was looking for foreigners to lead her troops against the forces of the mikado, but for some inscrutable reason Harden's offer was never favorably considered.

Awaiting the order from Li Hung Chang to go on and take charge of a gunboat, Harden regaled the reporters with his own version of the history of his life. He had been given a $2,000 education in the British naval reserve. In 1890, while his ship was cruising in Argentine waters, the revolution of 1890 broke out in that country. He resigned from the British navy and took a lieutenantcy in the land forces of the Union Civica, the insurgent body. He stated that he took part in the awful slaughter in the streets of Buenos Ayres in June, 1890, when hundreds were moved down.

In September of that year Harden went to England and later received a gold medal—which he does not carry with him—for saving seven lives off the coast of St. Malo, France. Later he went to Chile and used his sword in aid of the insurgents, taking part in the battles of Iquique, Pisagua, Huara, Antofagasta, Taitai and Copiapo.

He then visited Honolulu and stirred up a revolutionary movement, for which he was deported. He next visited Piji and Samoa in turn, but the authorities would not let him remain.—San Francisco Chronicle.

OUR FIRST LADY.

Mrs. Cleveland Looking Forward to the Time When She Will Be Free.

It is well known in Washington that Mrs. Cleveland is very tired of being the wife of the president, and that she looks forward with great joy to the time when she can once more be plain Mrs. Cleveland.

As the wife of the president Mrs. Cleveland leads a life which is dreadfully monotonous. She is debarred from general society and can accept no hospitality except from the members of the cabinet, and cabinet dinners are pretty dreary affairs, because all the members know one another so thoroughly before the first season is half over that they get tired of the same society before the list has been exhausted.

The wives of the members of the cabinet have a much better time of it socially. Out shopping at the theater or in any public place Mrs. Cleveland's every movement is watched, so that her whole life is more or less artificial and subjects her to constant constraint. Mrs. Cleveland would no doubt be glad to leave the White House behind her. She is fully convinced that it is not a place for happiness.—Chicago Times-Herald.
